WOMEN AND UNIONS

(a 3-credit evening course in our 1984 summer session)

Two controversial words: women and unions. Both vital components of our society. Do they have anything in common? On the face of it, very little. In reality, a great deal. For one thing, they have both played vital roles throughout human history and neither have much to show for it.

Oddly enough, while women are roughly one half of humanity and labour - or workers - which includes women, of course, represent the vast majority of human beings, neither group has had much to say about itself.

Other social strata have been very vocal and have projected specific images of themselves.

Labour and Women have been mainly described, praised or belittled by historians and writers who were neither women nor workers.

We will try to see why.
